A metropolitan area can be considered to be a region with a high degree of integration. Currently, Barcelona does not fulfill this criteria due to the lack of connection between the city’s central and peripheral areas. The metropolitan area is the perfect balance between the city and the countryside, and it is a central point for the development of the city and its territory.

Metropolitan organization

Territorial connection

The relationship between the city and the sea has been transformed due to the introduction of infrastructures such as the train or the macroscopic plane. This has transformed the metropolis and its development has been conditioned by the new urban planning policies.

The size and location of the territory occupied by the port area offer the possibility of connecting the city with the sea. Furthermore, the transformation of the negative pole which the plan represents has determined the development of the city and the country.

The city is not the end of Barcelona.

Other activities can be done opposed ways, technological signed actions that are not only necessary in order to connect the city but also to connect the city with the sea.

Free space system

Neighborhood identity

Open space index

Sustainability

The city is a combination of economic activities, cultural and sport venues, recreational areas, and the sea. The city is not only a place to live, but also a place to work and play. It is a city that is focused on the environment, where people can enjoy their daily lives and still preserve the natural beauty of the area.

The concept of a metropolis is not only about size, but also about integration. Barcelona is a city that is not only connected to the sea, but also connected to the countryside. The city is not only a place to live, but also a place to work and play. It is a city that is focused on the environment, where people can enjoy their daily lives and still preserve the natural beauty of the area.

Neighborhood identity

Open space index

Sustainability

The city is a combination of economic activities, cultural and sport venues, recreational areas, and the sea. The city is not only a place to live, but also a place to work and play. It is a city that is focused on the environment, where people can enjoy their daily lives and still preserve the natural beauty of the area.

The concept of a metropolis is not only about size, but also about integration. Barcelona is a city that is not only connected to the sea, but also connected to the countryside. The city is not only a place to live, but also a place to work and play. It is a city that is focused on the environment, where people can enjoy their daily lives and still preserve the natural beauty of the area.